

Appendix 1: List of brownfield sites showing invertebrate quality assessments

During autumn 2005 a provisional assessment of the invertebrate importance of brownfield sites in the Thames Gateway was undertaken by two entomologists with recognised expertise in the field of brownfield habitats and species. A large sample of sites was selected according to geographical area, size, land use and other factors, and a bespoke brownfield habitat assessment form was developed to enable the collection of objective and comparable site data. Almost 180 sites – over 40% of the resource – were assessed during the study. The assessors, drawing on their previous experience and knowledge of the region’s brownfield sites, were able to evaluate each site as being of either High, Medium or Low potential importance for invertebrates. Over 70 sites – 40% of the sites assessed – were estimated to be of ‘High’ quality for invertebrates. The remaining sites will be assessed during 2006-07.

NOTES:

1. The primary data source for this project was the national Land-Use Database. Secondary sources included aerial photographs, local authorities and personal knowledge.
2. The majority of assessments took place in 2005, with a few desktop assessments based upon older data.
3. Some of the larger sites were divided into compartments for assessment purposes. These are shown as multiple entries for the same site, with their own assessment.

Owing mainly to point 1 above this appendix can only provide a snapshot of information from sites as they existed at the time. Many of the sites were already in the process of being developed, for many others development was imminent. This information will be updated periodically. This information, along with the alert maps, should be used to inform decisions as to when an invertebrate survey is necessary for a planning application.
